1. Panel Discussion titled "Remembering Michael Burawoy: Theory, Practice & Politics" on 20th May 2025

Department of Sociology at Nagaland University, in association with Research Committee 01 (RC 01) of the Indian Sociological Society (ISS) hosted a distinguished Panel Discussion titled "Remembering Michael Burawoy: Theory, Practice & Politics" on 20th May 2025. The event brought together eminent sociologists and scholars to reflect upon the contributions of Michael Burawoy to sociological thought, emphasizing the interplay between theory, practice, and politics in contemporary sociological inquiry. The session was chaired by Prof. Sujata Patel, Professor of Sociology (Retd.) at the University of Hyderabad, whose leadership provided a structured and engaging dialogue. Panelists included: Prof. Geoffrey Pleyers, President, International Sociological Association, who highlighted the global relevance of Burawoy's work in public sociology and its ethical implications. Prof. Rajiv Gupta, Former Professor and Head, Department of Sociology, Rajasthan University, who reflected on the impact of Burawoy's methodology in Indian sociological practice. Prof. Rajesh Misra, Former Professor and Head, Department of Sociology, Lucknow University, who discussed the theoretical underpinnings and critical approaches in Burawoy's scholarship. Dr. Aditya Raj, Associate Professor, Department of Humanities & Social Sciences, IIT Patna, who examined the intersections of academic research, activism, and policy-making in Burawoy's work.

The event was convened by Prof. Nilika Mehrotra, Convenor of RC 01, and co-convened by Dr. Suraj Beri, ensuring a seamless organization that promoted inclusive academic discourse. The discussion fostered a thoughtful exploration of Michael Burawoy's legacy, particularly his advocacy for reflexivity in sociological research, the significance of public sociology, and the ethical responsibility of sociologists in addressing contemporary social challenges.

Abstract

Islands, as the subject of sociological inquiry, have caught scholarly attention in the recent times. Anthropological literature depicts islands as a landscape characterized by their unique geography, cultural practices, and social organization. Considering its unique positionality in both social and academic discussions, this talk explores how islands are conceptualized as socio-ecological spaces. It traces the imagination and visualization of islands in various accounts, including colonial and post-colonial writings. The talk offers an ethnographic engagement with Majuli River island in Assam to highlight the complex socio-ecological entanglements. Contrary to its depiction as an isolated space, islands like Majuli offer a contextual reading of the intricate relationships between ecology, communities and social institutions.

Dr. Suraj Beri, Co-Convenor RC 01, ISS

The lecture addressed the emerging scholarly interest in islands as subjects of sociological inquiry. Dr. Bora examined how anthropological literature has traditionally depicted islands as landscapes characterized by unique geography, cultural practices, and social organization. Moving beyond conventional representations, the talk explored islands as socio-ecological spaces, tracing their imagination and visualization across colonial and post-colonial writings. The presentation offered an ethnographic engagement with Majuli River Island in Assam, highlighting complex socio-ecological entanglements. Contrary to viewing islands as isolated spaces, Dr. Bora demonstrated how Majuli offers a contextual understanding of intricate relationships between ecology, communities, and social institutions.

4. The New Mobilities Paradigm: Through the lens of Migration and Intersectionality Studies

The Department of Sociology, Nagaland University, organized a special lecture on November 18, 2025 (Tuesday) as part of its series with RC 01: Theory and Practice in Sociology, ISS. The lecture explored the New Mobilities Paradigm through critical theoretical and analytical developments, examining intersections with migration and intersectionality studies. Dr. Mayurakshi Chaudhuri, Associate Professor of Sociology and Digital Humanities at FLAME University, Pune was the speaker for the lecture. The lecture addressed mobility as an overarching concept in social sciences and everyday lived reality, acknowledging its constant presence throughout human history in enabling investigation of various movements of people connected to material, ideal, and virtual flows. Dr. Chaudhuri examined how concepts of im/mobility reflect global historical trajectories of powerful conditions deriving from imperialism and colonialism. Her presentation traced the historical development of the New Mobilities Paradigm while highlighting deeper theoretical engagements and intellectual developments within Mobility Studies. A key focus was exploring critical intersections between Mobility Studies and other broader domains of inquiry, particularly Intersectionality Studies and Migration Studies, with special attention to postcolonial South Asia. The presentation offered valuable insights into: historical trajectories of mobility shaped by imperialism and colonialism, theoretical developments within the field of Mobility Studies, interdisciplinary intersections between mobility, migration, and intersectionality regional contextualization with focus on postcolonial South Asia.

Abstract

Mobility as an overarching concept in social sciences as well as part of the everyday lived reality has been a constant in human history that has allowed for investigation of a variety of movements of people in connection to material, ideal, and virtual flows. Popularly examined through the lens of the "The New Mobilities Paradigm" (Sheller and Urry, 2006), concepts of im/mobility often, if not always, reflect global historical trajectories of powerful conditions (e.g. deriving from imperialism and colonialism) (Urry 2000). This lecture shall trace the history of the New Mobilities Paradigm, as well as highlight deeper theoretical engagements and intellectual developments made within the domain of Mobility Studies. The lecture shall explore critical intersections of Mobility Studies with other broader domains of inquiry such as Intersectionality Studies, and Migration Studies, particularly focusing on postcolonial South Asia.
